

STATES OF GRACE

STILL PHOTOS

1. Dr. Grace Dammann outside the rehabilitation facility in San Francisco where she receives physical therapy. Dammann survived a near-fatal head-on collision on the Golden Gate Bridge in 2008. The new feature-length documentary States of Grace by filmmakers Helen S. Cohen and Mark Lipman follows her journey of loss, resilience, and renewal as she comes to terms with her injuries and forges a new path as a wheelchair-bound physician. Photo credit: Mark Lipman

2. Dr. Grace Dammann performs part of her physical therapy routine with support from her partner Fu Schroeder at their home at Green Gulch Farm in Marin, California. Dammann survived a near-fatal head-on collision on the Golden Gate Bridge in 2008. The new feature-length documentary States of Grace by filmmakers Helen S. Cohen and Mark Lipman follows Dammann's struggle to come to terms with her injuries and forge a new path as a wheelchair-bound physician. Photo credit: Mark Lipman

-more-

3. Dr. Grace Dammann with the Dalai Lama at the Unsung Heroes of Compassion award ceremony in 2009. Dammann was honored for her work as the co-founder of one of San Francisco's first HIV/AIDS clinics for poor people during the disease's deadliest era. She later survived a near-fatal head-on collision on the Golden Gate Bridge. The new feature-length documentary States of Grace by filmmakers Helen S. Cohen and Mark Lipman chronicles her determination to return to medical practice following her injuries. Photo credit: Michael Yamashita

4. Fu Schroeder (left) and Dr. Grace Dammann (right) with their daughter, Sabrina, in 2003. The family's struggle to adjust to Dammann's severe injuries following a near-fatal head-on collision on the Golden Gate Bridge is chronicled in the new feature-length documentary States of Grace by filmmakers Helen S. Cohen and Mark Lipman. Photo credit: Barbara Weng

5. Dr. Grace Dammann (right), Fu Schroeder (center) and their daughter, Sabrina. The new feature-length documentary States of Grace by filmmakers Helen S. Cohen and Mark Lipman follows the family's struggle to adjust after Dammann sustained severe injuries when another driver veered across the divide on the Golden Gate Bridge and crashed head on into her car. Schroeder was primary caregiver to both Dammann and Sabrina, who was born with cerebral palsy, during the five-year period chronicled in the film. Photo credit: Mark Lipman

-more-

6. Dr. Grace Dammann with directors Helen S. Cohen and Mark Lipman. Dammann is the subject of the new feature-length documentary States of Grace, which chronicles her struggle to come to terms with severe injuries in the wake of a head-on collision on the Golden Gate Bridge. Dammann was in a coma for seven weeks, survived twelve surgeries, and stayed in rehabilitation hospitals for more than a year before returning to her home at Green Gulch Farm in Marin, California. Photo credit: Fu Schroeder

7. Filmmakers Helen S. Cohen and Mark Lipman interview Dr. Grace Dammann on her patio at Green Gulch Farm in Marin, California. Dammann sustained severe injuries in a near-fatal head-on collision on the Golden Gate Bridge. Her remarkable recovery is chronicled in the new feature-length documentary States of Grace. Photo credit: Fu Schroeder

8. Mark Lipman and Helen S. Cohen produced and directed the new feature-length documentary States of Grace, which follows Dr. Grace Dammann's journey of loss, resilience, and renewal after narrowly surviving a head-on crash on the Golden Gate Bridge. Photo credit: Art Bodner

###